ANDY WARHOL: LATE PAINTINGS

September 19 – October 31, 2015

OPENING RECEPTION: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 6-8 PM

Skarstedt is pleased to present an exhibition of Andy Warhol's Late Paintings at its uptown gallery this fall. These works, made during one of the artist's most prolific periods, signify a culmination of the themes and processes explored throughout Warhol's career. The exhibition will feature large-scale paintings from the Skulls, Hammer and Sickle, Rorschach, Knives and Reversals series, amongst others, and date from 1974 through 1987, the year of Warhol's death. Andy Warhol: Late Paintings will be on view at Skarstedt (20 E. 79th Street) from September 19 through October 31, 2015.

*"I had energy and wanted to rush home and paint and stop doing society portraits."*¹

In the late 1970's Warhol was turning fifty. Consumed with reexamining himself and his accomplishments, he was looking for stimulation and change—something to inspire him. Warhol often traveled to Europe, discovering new imagery to explore in his work. And it was on a trip to Paris in 1977, while visiting the art museums with Pontus Hultén, the founding director of the Pompidou, that Warhol discovered this newfound motivation, and the stimulation to experiment with untried ideas in painting.

Warhol reengaged with the act of painting and developed new techniques. He combined the tools in his repertoire, including the mechanical production of his early Pop paintings, and more recent innovations in process and abstraction. From this experimentation came the abstractions of the Shadows and Camouflage paintings. Warhol found new interest in the process of painting itself, highlighting the artist's hand in his brushstrokes as seen in his Ladies and Gentlemen and Dollar Signs.

The late works of Andy Warhol, as featured in this exhibition represent a critical transition for the artist, embracing his past while simultaneously looking towards the future and establishing his lasting legacy.
