ADAM HANDLER

In Adam Handler's own words, his art attempts to capture the the energy of the struggle between extrapolation of character and the personal and artistic freedom of mid-twentieth century America that conflicted the youth then and continues to the younger generations of today. In his mixed media work, he identifies with his generation's concerns by commenting on perceptions of contemporary politics and social expectations while demonstrating a similar rebellious spirit of the past.

Handler's bright and youthfully geometric work captures attention and is constantly evolving. He is a young artist working out of Queens, NY.
