Los Angeles Recharged

ART

The next generation of the art and entertainment worlds mingle. Many descend from art dynasties, but they are also creating their own futures in Los Angeles.

FROM LEFT: Jason Ward is a man of many hats: a graphic designer, illustrator, photographer, and soon-to-be fashion designer with a line called Vaisle. Niels Kantor, whose parents were art dealers, has his own gallery, Kantor Gallery on Melrose, and looks for new artists as well as displaying works by Andy Warhol and Jean-Michel Basquiat. Honor Fraser, a British import and former model, collects such artists as Koons, Cattelan, and Noble and Webster, has brought her passion for art to her work at the Gagosian Gallery. She represents major artists in Gagosian's stable. Kenton Parker, artist and designer, gathers inspiration from popular culture and everyday life. Parker draws and paints a rich vocabulary of icons and motifs and is working on his upcoming solo show "Products of My Environment."
